Project Management for Hazard Communication and Stewardship

Sunday, September 22, 2024
Omni Charlotte Hotel – Charlotte, North Carolina

Course Description and Objectives

The goal of this course is to develop an understanding of the principles of project management as they relate HazCom and stewardship. An emphasis is placed on effectively leading projects, what differentiates project work from other types of work, and important aspects of working with and on project teams. Hazard communicators and product stewards are often called upon to participate in or lead projects, and good project team members and leaders are always in demand. This course, through lecture and discussion, will provide participants with skill critical to optimizing their effectiveness when working on a project.

This is a basic course and there are no prerequisites.

Intended Audience

Hazard communication and stewardship professionals looking to strengthen their project management skill in order to be better prepared to participate in important projects.

Course Fee: $290.00 Members // $430.00 Non-members

Reduced rates are available for students and retirees. Interested people may contact SCHC for more information.
