Presentation abstract

Following the end of the transition period for REACH registration last year, attention has turned more to enforcement. Increased checks on registration dossiers, checking mixture classifications, and identification of common SDS issues are just some of the activities being undertaken by ECHA and the Member State competent authorities. Customers are also more aware of requirements, and requests for “compliance certificates” are increasing in number and complexity. This presentation will outline some of the key activities taking place and actions that companies should take to ensure they remain compliant.
